The Department of Arts and Humanities, in collaboration with DPG Law College, organized a One-Day Multidisciplinary National Seminar on “Democracy, Globalization, and the Rule of Law: Challenges and Prospects” on 16th October 2025. The seminar brought together eminent scholars, academicians, researchers, and students from various disciplines to deliberate on the transformations that globalization and multiculturalism have introduced to democratic governance in the 21st century. The event aimed to facilitate a meaningful exchange of ideas on the evolving challenges to democracy, the impact of global socio-economic forces, and the role of the rule of law in maintaining balance between state sovereignty, human rights, and global justice.

Theme of the Seminar

The central theme of the seminar—“Democracy, Globalization, and the Rule of Law: Challenges and Prospects”—reflects the ongoing global discourse on how interconnected economies, migration, multiculturalism, and technological advances reshape democratic systems. It explored how populism, nationalism, and inequality are redefining democratic participation, governance, and citizenship. The seminar provided an interdisciplinary platform to discuss democracy not only as a political system but also as a cultural and legal process influenced by literature, economics, media, and human rights.

Objectives of the Seminar

- To examine the impact of globalization on sovereignty, governance, and democratic institutions.
- To explore multiculturalism as both a challenge and opportunity for modern democratic societies.
- To analyze historical and contemporary struggles for equality, rights, and participation.
- To engage with interdisciplinary perspectives connecting politics, economy, law, literature, media, and culture.
- To encourage academic and policy-oriented dialogue for strengthening democratic values in India and the global context.
